An impadeat instance of this kind of ignorant comment made upon football accidents appeared to minimise the danger to life and limb at this game we shall hardly be in a position to indite Fature of Formosa" let us hope that not only homilies concerning the cruelty of the Spaniards in attending bull fights. As many men are and ill-treated aborigines may have a chance to as horses are injured in a dozen bull-fights to come in contact with men whom they really can | make a 'Spanish holiday.'" Harry Furniss, I think, once wrote of frotball as the modern substitute for the prize ring, and now "Truth compares it with bull-fighting. We are getting on. as a matter of fact the accidents are, comparatively speaking, exceedingly few, while some casualties are inseparable from such a game. As Adam Lindsay Gordon, the Australian poet

All sports have their accidents, but we don't hear of them, and they are not carefully collected and published daily, to be reprinted over and over again, and served up months after. Are we to believe that there are no accidents in cycling, no fatalities in boxing, no ossualties in hunting, no lives lost in swimming, fishing, shooting, and in cricket. Indeed we could traverse the whole realm of sport from bookey and lacrosse to oricket and football, and we shall find records of death and mishap. It is inseparable from sport worth the having. But football receives most attention from penny a-liners and other soribes because it is the sport of the day, and hence the unanviable notoriety that some persons are trying to attach to the game. I have known men who have played football for years, have taken rart in 300, 400, and 500, matches, and have not only never been burt, but have never hurtan opponent. and never had a penalty kick or a free kick for fool play awarded against them. And yet in two instances at least, these follows were injured -and that hadly-directly they played cricket. An international half-back once remarked to me: No. no. I never taukle cricket. Football is dangerous enough for me. I wouldn't stand up against fast bowling on a bad wicket for any thing. I'd sooner play against gentle amateurs, I know these amateurs. Sham amateurism has been allowed too vigores a growth for years for it to be scotched and kills n w The Scottish Footiall Association strug gl. d with a similar state of things for years, bu they had to abandon their position, and legalis professionalism. I argue that professionalism a Rusby shoud be sanctioned, under very stringen o uditions. Shamamateurgand uncontrolled pro fessionalism have been the bane and the curse of every sport into which they have crept. Lot up be honest, fair, monly, aboveboard in our dealings with men, and let not the servants become the masters, as all sham amateurs invariably do. The Rugby Union and the county clubs have the ex perience of their Association and Scotch brether to aid them-not in framing more rules-butt assist them in drawing up wise provisions for the better regulation of professionalism. The Football Association is an older body than the Rugby Union, and owing to the remarkable development of the dribbling code has had a wider experience than the Union, and a conference between the two Pemperature might show the Union the pitfails and places to be dunidity avoided. If professionalism be legalised by the Rugby authorities, well-defined limits must beput to the payment-of players, poaching must be prohibited under severe pains and penalties, transfers must be made not easy but difficult, each player must be licensed, the smoller clubs must be protected, and the amateurs must be preserved and not ornshed. These are things which must be thought about. A far-seeing, wise scheme at the commencement will make professionalism possible, will encourage honesty, and wall put the sham amateur into his proper position-that of a servant and not of a master. Knowing what I do of Rugby football. I say be houset and encourage honesty. Do not be Puritanical and stiff-b cked and indirectly promote clandestime contracts and back-stairs diplomacy. THE GROWTH OF FOOTBALL IN THE ARMY.

Have you noticed how football is growing in the Army? A team representing the British Army, which is rather a large order, met the Corinthians on Saturday, at the Oval, but Tommy Atkins was no match for the gentlemen amateurs, who won by 8 gools to 1. Just in the same way the Broughton Rangers of Manchester met the Enniskillen Dragoons at the Rughy game. The Rangers, who are not by any means the best club in Luncushire, gained a victory by 47 points (4 goals, 5 tries) to 3 points (1 try). In other words, the soldiers got over On London,the line once in each game. In each of these matches we see that class will tell. So far as Association is concerned the game is very popular in the Army, because there is an Army Challenge Cup to compete for. hingland, Ireland, and Scotland have been divided into eleven regiments' districts for the purposes of football The various corps have formed over 70 football teams and these have been duly drawn in ties. The first round of their competition has to be completed by to-day (Saturday) retoper 7: As might naturally be expected such a movement as this has emanated from two old Etopians. Mr. Harry. McCalmont, the millionaire owner of Ising lass, founded the Army Pootball Association when he was in the Scots Guards, and Mr. Mo-Calmont was well supported by Captain W. P. Pulteney, a gentleman who still retains his interest in the game and in Army football. Captain Palteney, who belongs to the Football Association, is a son of the Rev. R. T. Pulteney, of Market Harborough, and was also educated at On Shanghal,-Eton. Like Mr. McCalmont, he was a great footballer at Eton, and carried his passion with him juto the army.
